

People who have learned many different skills are more likely to succeed than those who have learned just one skill. Do you agree or disagree with the statement? (300 words)

Steps

1. Make a list of four reasons to agree and four reasons to disagree with the statement?
2. What are some synonyms for the words skills / people?
3. Make a list of the linking words that you are familiar with. Compare these with those around you and try to incorporate a different word that you are unfamiliar with into your essay.
4. What are some words that you use to acknowledge a different perspective?
5. What is success for you?
6. Define the word environment? How quickly is it changing?
7. Do you agree or disagree?
8. Think of two examples to emphasize your point of view
9. Why isn't the opposite view to your possible?
10. Open with a general statement that includes all the essential information given in the question.
11. Create a good follow on sentence, followed by a statement highlighting your position.

In today's multi layered world the demand for those with an increasingly broad perspective and skill set is on the rise, as companies face environments that are changing more so than ever before. Add to this, individuals who choose to forge their own paths in life. These people must wear many hats out of necessity in order to grow a successful enterprise. It is for these reasons that I feel that the truly successful people must not only hold many different skills, but be prepared to grow that knowledge consistently.

A company that only creates one product that never changes runs the risk a competitive product taking over their market base. Likewise, an employee that is only capable of singing one note is easily replaced unless he or she is prepared to grow and develop.

Successful business owners also must be able to perform many different tasks. It is no good being the best painter in the world, if nobody knows that you exist. You must be able to market yourself, communicate well, have a knowledge of business structure and communications, and even know how to work social media to your best advantage.

It is also true to say that there are no longer any safe industries in the world. Taxies are a classic example of what was once a traditionally safe occupation, only to have its entire existence rocked in recent years with the emergence of Uber, a company that allows private individuals the ability to assist others with their transport needs on a private basis.

Certainly (Sure), there are those who find success by slowly climbing the corporate ladder and holding close the ability that is of immense value to the company that they work for, but even these people must know how to communicate effectively, understand company politics and eventually learn how to manage people as they gain positions of management.

Today, it is more apparent than ever, that to be truly successful in life people must be prepared to offer more value to those around them. This means that they must develop a colorful pallet of abilities to achieve their greatest potential.

People who have learned many different skills are more likely to succeed than those who have learned just one skill. Do you agree or disagree with the statement? (300 words)

Source - <http://www.testbig.com/toefl-essays/do-you-agree-or-disagree-statement-people-who-learn-many-different-skills-are-more-0>

Today's world demands a person who has the knowledge of everything and not focused on a particular thing. If you can do so many things you will be popular among people around you and able to make so many friends of different fields. By learning many skills a person can guide others a little bit about so many things, able solve problems at basic level and have a huge knowledge of everything. That's why I agree with the statement that a person who learn many skills will be more successful.

My first reason for the statement that a person knowing many skills is more successful is that if a person knows many skills will be more popular and attractive. Because if a person knows so many things, he can impress everyone by helping them. For example, my neighbor knows cooking and gardening very well and she always helps me when ever I have got problem while I am cooking or my plants looks wilted and weak and all the person who leaves in our apartment come to her for help in the same.

My second reason for the statement that a person learn many skills is more successful is that if a person learn many skills he will be able to make friends from many different fields that might be supportive for future. Because if you know so many people you can get information about other fields and use them for your work or job and other opportunities that you can get from them. For instance when my husband was in graduate school he was involved in many social and physical activities and because of that he made lots of friends from those fields. When he was searching for a job, he found a connection with a chairperson of multinational company who offered him a job with very high salary and reputation.

Another reason is that if you learn only one skill your knowledge will be limited to a particular thing and it will always be a bug in your head. But by knowing many skills you can live easily anywhere with those skills and techniques around the world. For example one of my best friend who was always focused on her studies. When she moved with her boyfriend, she doesn't know how to use a simple vacuum cleaner or a microwave, because of that she always had a fight with her boyfriend.

In conclusion, a person will be more successful if he knows many skills, he will be having lots of friends, popularity, fame, reputation and makes life much easier. But by knowing only one skill he will be limited to his own cocoon. So its better to be a jack in all trades than master of one.

People should be open to new ideas and change his or her mind to be successful. Do you agree or disagree with the statement? (300 words)

Steps

1. Make a list of four reasons to agree and four reasons to disagree with the statement?
2. What are some synonyms for words that relate to – ideas, change, success.
3. Make a list of the linking words that you are familiar with. Compare these with those around you and try to incorporate a different word that you are unfamiliar with into your essay.
4. What are some words that you use to acknowledge a different perspective?
5. Define success in another way. (not money)
6. Can you think of an analogy or a small story that relates to success?
7. Do you agree or disagree?
8. Think of three examples to emphasize your point of view
9. Why isn't the opposite view to your possible?
10. Open with a general statement that includes all the essential information given in the question.
11. Create a good follow on sentence, followed by a statement highlighting your position. Remember that a follow on sentence must link, by paraphrasing something in the previous sentence.

People should be open to new ideas and change his or her mind to be successful. Do you agree or disagree with the statement? (300 words)

A blank canvas always remains a blank canvas, unless new ideas are allowed to take shape and colors are added. People are the same. In order to manifest success in life, individuals must be prepared to embrace new ideas, empathize with others, and be prepared to alter their own perspectives in order to grow and develop. It is for these reasons that I strongly endorse the perspective that in order to achieve all that you were meant to in life, one must be prepared to alter his or her preexisting points of view.

A small child that crawls around on the floor learns that by standing on two feet he or she can get from point A to point B far more quickly than if by just crawling on the floor. Their perspectives are challenged when they see adults walking around and they make the decision to learn and try something new. For the child, this is a success in life, a victory to be proud of. It is only as adults that our ability to have our ideas challenged is viewed with reluctance rather than excitement.

As we age, we come to understand that every person in the world has different points of view that are a result of their upbringing, influences in life and the opportunities that are presented to them. It is impossible to have experienced the same reality as the people around us. Every individual therefore, that crosses our path in life is destined to teach us a lesson, just as we have the ability to teach those around us. We must find the child in ourselves and embrace these lessons in order to grow and develop, and by the very nature of this idea, become successful.

Certainly, there are those people that hold onto their pre-existing learning and resist change at every turn. We have all met these people. Those who are reluctant to, or unwilling to learn from the experiences of others. These individuals are destined to never move beyond their own self-imposed boundaries.

However for those of us who view the world as an opportunity to challenge, grow and learn, you find success in whatever environment that captures your heart. It is only by picking up a paintbrush and using our ever changing ideas on the tapestry of life that you can find success.